Discoursing Peace and Security in Africa
Macharia Munene

Mass Media and Terrorism in the Sahel: An Empirical Review
Babatunde Raphael Ojebuyi

The Military versus Boko Haram in Nigeria’s War on Terror: The Contending Issues
Dele Babalola and Caleb Ayuba

An Appraisal of the Role of Whistleblowers in Combating Human Trafficking and Terrorism in the Sahel Region
Salome Konkat Kigbu and Gashion Daniel Danna

The Imperative of Research and Intelligence in Counterterrorism in the Sahel Region
Gerald Ifeanyi Okafor

Trans-Nationalisation of Terrorism in the Sahel Region: An Analysis of Peace and Human Security Issues
Paul Andrew Gwaza
CALL FOR PAPER

African Journal of Peace and Human Security,
Volume 2, Number 1, 2016

The Sub-Regional Instruments on the Control of Small Arms and Light Weapons in Africa: Examining the Impacts on Peace and Human Security

Violent conflicts, insurgency, terrorism and acts of criminalities have inflicted great devastations and destructions on African States and their peoples. It has been established that these would be minimal and manageable without the ceaseless deployment of illicit small arms and light weapons (SALWs), especially by non-state actors in human societies. In responding to the threats posed by illicit proliferation of SALWs, the African Union adopted the Bamako Declaration (2000) as a continental instrument and all the sub-regional organizations in Africa have further developed their frameworks to assist states combat the challenge. In view of the effectiveness or otherwise of these continental and sub-regional instruments, the African Journal of Peace and Human Security is calling for scholarly papers to interrogate the impacts of the implementation of these instruments on peace and human security in Africa.

African Journal of Peace and Human Security,
Volume 2, Number 2, 2016

Democracy, Governance and Development in Africa: Special Edition in Honour and Commemoration of the Death of Professor Claude Ake

Professor Claude Ake (February 18, 1939-November 7, 1996) was one of the finest and foremost African Political Economists who dedicated his intellectual work and life to the social emancipation and empowerment of the African people. He accomplished this feat by theorizing an African social science paradigm that emphasized the primacy of African thinking for democracy, governance and development. These are contained in his numerous articles and books including, Revolutionary Pressures in Africa (1978); Social Science as Imperialism: A Theory of Political Development (1979); Democratization of Disempowerment in Africa (1994); Democracy and Development in Africa (1996) and The Feasibility of Democracy in Africa, which was posthumously published in 2000. It is significant to revisit the fundamental issues foregrounding Ake’s scholarship in view of their pre-eminence in responding to the challenges of peace and human security facing the continent, especially in relation to external exertions by forces of globalisation and climate change.

Kindly visit www.ajphs.org for further details.